Special Issue on Work, Health, and Meaningful Occupation in the Age of Climate Change

You are invited to submit a manuscript for consideration in a special issue titled, Work, Health, and Meaningful Occupation in the Age of Climate Change. For this issue, the editors will consider manuscripts across a broad range of professions and occupations that are addressing climate/sustainability education, mitigation, adaptation and/or resilience with a core premise that for people to thrive our planet must thrive too.

Topics include but are not limited to:

- Creation of new work roles
- Transformation of existing work roles
- Role of meaningful occupation as a form of regenerative activism
- Inherent connection between human, business, and planetary thriving
- Consideration for occupational health, safety, and justice in emerging areas of climate and sustainability work
- Responsibility of workers across all professions and occupations to pivot in response to the climate crisis
- Strategies for climate adaptation to increase participation in meaningful occupations
- Case examples on these or related topics are welcome
